(U) Congo – ISIS Behind Suicide Bombing

(U) Beni – An Islamic State in Iraq and ash-Sham (ISIS) group in Africa claimed responsibility for two explosions in eastern Congo, including its first suicide bombing, deepening fears that extremists have now laid roots in this corner of the continent long plagued by rebels. The claims came just days after a Ugandan man detonated his explosives at a busy intersection. Authorities at the time said he was a member of a rebel group known as the Allied Democratic Forces (ADF). While the ADF has pledged its allegiance to ISIS, there has not been independent corroboration that the two organizations were working in coordination with one another beyond sharing ideology.
